We All Pay The Price

Anti-Poverty Subsidies for Low-Wage Workers In Santa Monica's Coastal Zone

Workers and their families are not the only ones paying the price of low-wage jobs.

Government at all levels, from local to federal, faces increased costs because poverty-wage jobs without health care benefits lead to an increased need for anti-poverty programs and services. In effect, these programs serve as a hidden subsidy to low-wage employers.

Ultimately, these increased costs are borne by taxpayers. In the Santa Monica coastal zone, the Political Economy Research Institute (PERI) report commissioned by the city estimates that 2,477 workers earn less than the proposed living wage. Based on the PERI report's description of the prototypical low-wage worker and his or her family, we have calculated the cost of anti-poverty subsidies for which the typical family is eligible.<sup>1</sup> These calculations help to paint a more comprehensive picture of the overall societal cost of working poverty. Our calculations show the following:

- The family of the typical coastal zone low-wage worker is eligible for anti-poverty programs costing at least $8,209 per year.
- Multiplied by the estimated 2,477 low-wage workers in the coastal zone, these workers are eligible for subsidies with a total price tag of over $20 million per year.
- With a living wage of $10.69 and full family health benefits, the cost of subsidies for the typical family would be reduced to zero.

Assumptions

These calculations were based on the following assumptions. The PERI report included a description of the prototypical low-wage worker's family, based on an analysis of L.A. County <sup>1</sup> Although individuals may be eligible for anti-poverty programs, they may not take advantage of them. For example, a 1994 study of the federal Earned Income Tax Credit showed that between 80 and 86 percent of those eligible actually applied for the credit (Scholtz). In addition, programs such as Section 8 in L.A. County have long waiting lists because of inadequate funding which prevent many of those who are eligible from receiving benefits. However, the continued need for such programs creates pressure on government to increase funding, as evidenced by the federal government's $5.4 million funding increase this year for new Section 8 vouchers in L.A. County.

data from the Current Population Survey (Pollin, Table 8.15). The report found that the average family had certain characteristics, shown in Table 1.<sup>2</sup> The typical low-wage worker in L.A. County earns $8.00 per hour and works 1,900 hours per year, which is slightly less than full time. In addition, the PERI report found that the typical low-wage worker is not the sole earner in the household. In fact, the typical low-wage worker accounts for only 58% of his or her family's total earnings, an assumption we have included in our calculations. The typical family is made up of two adults and two children, with only the primary worker having health insurance.

Cost of Subsidies

Given the prototypical family's annual household income and size, we determined their eligibility for a variety of anti-poverty programs, and calculated the annual cost of the programs, as shown in Table 2 on the next page.<sup>3</sup> Before the Living Wage, our prototypical family would qualify for an estimated $8,209 worth of subsidies per year. The family would qualify for the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), a federal program designed to increase the income of the working poor through tax refunds and supplemental cash payments. The family would not be eligible for Medi-Cal, but would qualify for Healthy Families, which has a higher income limit. This joint federal and state program provides health coverage for children in low-income families. The spouse would not be eligible for Healthy Families, which is only for children, and would have to use the county's public health facilities, which have no income eligibility requirements. The county's system is funded by the federal, state, and county governments. In addition, the family would be eligible for a Section 8 housing voucher funded by the federal government. Finally, the family would be eligible for reduced price school breakfast and lunch programs, funded by the federal government.

<sup>2</sup> Although we are using the term "average," the prototypical family characteristics were based on both the means and the medians of the CPS data for L.A. County (Pollin et al p. 157).

<sup>3</sup> For additional information on calculating the costs of these programs, see Appendix I. For additional information about the eligibility calculations these figures are based on, see Appendix II.

Table 2. Annual Subsidies Per Typical Household Before and After the Living Wage

	Before Living Wage	After Living Wage
		$10.69 With Health Benefits	$12.69 With No Health Benefits
Gross Household Earnings	$26,000	$31,111	$34,911
Earned Income Tax Credit	$959	0	0
Healthy Families Coverage	$1,606	0	0
L.A. County Indigent Health Care	$448	0	From 0 to $1,344
Section 8	$4,596	0	0
Federal School Meals Program	$601	0	0
Food Stamps	0	0	0
Total Anti-Poverty Subsidies	$8,209	0	From 0 to $1,344

After the living wage, the typical family could fall into one of two categories. Assuming the employer provided full family health benefits, the family would not need to use publicly-funded health care programs, and the family's income would be too high to qualify for any of the other subsidies. If the employer opted to pay the higher wage of $12.69 without benefits, the family would not be eligible for either Medi-Cal or Healthy Families. The goal of the higher wage is to allow the family to purchase health insurance, in which case the cost of subsidies would be zero. However, if the family chose not to purchase health insurance and continued to use county health facilities, or chose to insure some family members and not others, the cost to the government would range from $448 to $1,344 per year.

There is one important caveat to this listing of subsidies. Because these figures only represent subsidies for which workers are eligible, actual program costs to government are less. Not all those who are eligible for government programs take advantage of them, and access to some government programs is restricted because of insufficient funding. These figures represent the highest potential cost to government and taxpayers, not actual costs. Even so, they provide a powerful illustration of the cost to society of subsidizing low-wage employment and the dramatic improvements provided by a living wage.

Santa Monica EITC Proposal

Some opponents of a living wage ordinance have proposed that the city instead create an additional anti-poverty subsidy by adopting an EITC program to supplement the federal program. The Empirical Research Group's (ERG) report, commissioned by the hotel industry, recommends the creation of a Santa Monica EITC (SMEITC) program. There are two major problems with this proposal. First, it is illogical to create an income tax credit program on the municipal level, because cities do not collect personal income tax. The ERG report states that "several" states have adopted their own EITC programs, which makes sense because states do collect income tax, but the report does not provide any examples of cities who have done so.

Secondly, because cities do not collect income tax, Santa Monica would have to come up with another means of financing an EITC program. The ERG report suggests two alternatives for financing an SMEITC for low-wage workers in the zone: using general revenues or increasing the business license or sales tax. As the report itself states, creating another public subsidy for low-wage employers amounts to "workers essentially get[ting] a raise paid for by the government."<sup>4</sup> In this case, the Santa Monica taxpayers. The other alternative, raising business taxes city-wide, would unfairly penalize responsible employers who are already paying living wages to their employees. Clearly, the solution to low-wage poverty in Santa Monica's tourism industry is not to create yet another costly public subsidy for business, but rather for employers to pay a living wage.
