Reason:	Rare example of 1920s institutional development in the Oakwood neighborhood, an early African-American enclave in Venice. In the early 20th century, Oakwood was the area in Venice where blacks were permitted to reside relatively unharrassed. Venice had a small black population dating to its founding, who worked in the service industries in nearby hotels, restaurants and amusement facilities. During World War II, the local African-American population increased substantially to work at aerospace and defense industry plants in the area. This Pentecostal church may have an important association with the African-American community that historically resided in this area of Venice; however, this association could not be confirmed. More research needed to complete the evaluation. The building appeared to be vacant at the time of the survey.
