

SUMMARY

Stires Staircase Bungalow Court is a multi-family residential property located on West Sunset Boulevard between West Innes Avenue and West Marion Avenue in the Echo Park neighborhood of Los Angeles. Built in 1922 on a steeply sloped site for H.L. Stires, the subject property consists of ten bungalows designed by the Fidroeff Brothers in the Mission Revival architectural style arranged in a U-shape around a central concrete stairway.

During the late 19th and early 20th centuries, streetcar service played a key role in laying the groundwork for the future growth of Echo Park and surrounding areas. In 1886, the Ostrich Farm Railway (later to become Sunset Boulevard) was laid out, and by 1911, it was consolidated into the Pacific Electric Red Car line interurban network. The availability of public transportation made the Echo Park neighborhood easily accessible from downtown Los Angeles and encouraged residential development.

The bungalows are of wood-frame construction with stucco cladding and have flat roofs with parapets. The courtyard-facing elevations feature projecting tiled shed roofs, asymmetrical facades, stoops with tiled shed roofs, and off-centered entrances. On the south-facing elevation of each unit there is a door that leads to a basement. Fenestration consists of wood multi-lite casement windows, metal and wood double-hung windows, aluminum windows, and jalousie windows. Interiors feature built-in furniture, wood moldings, picture rails, and claw foot bathtubs.

Alterations to the property include the addition of a retaining wall in 2009, and the replacement of some windows, installation of awnings, the addition of screen doors, the remodeling of some kitchens, and the covering of original hardwood floors with linoleum and carpeting, all at unknown dates.

STIRES STAIRCASE BUNGALOW COURT HISTORIC-CULTURAL MONUMENT NOMINATION

7A: Proposed Monument Description:

Introduction:

The Stires Staircase Bungalow Court at 1251-1259 Sunset Boulevard sits on two adjacent parcels in the Angeleno Heights tract on the eastern edge of Echo Park, between Innes and Marion Avenues. At the time of construction, Angeleno Heights was one of the earliest major subdivisions on the outskirts of Los Angeles. The site contains a courtyard of ten modest bungalows, built in 1922 in the Mission Revival style. Although the orientation and layout of the site includes the distinguishing characteristics of a classic downhill U-parti bungalow court, it has other details that go beyond these conventional features with several unique aspects. For instance, each bungalow has a basement assimilated into the grade of the hillside, and there is no vehicular access anywhere on the site. Additionally, there is a unique Spanish tile and stucco feature added to the roof of each unit.

Exterior - Courtyard:

This residential property occupies a steeply graded slope and is accessed by a central concrete stairway, perpendicular to Sunset Blvd, which leads up through an open green frontage and continues through the middle of the terraced courtyard. The stairs run through the entire sloping depth of the courtyard, bordered on both sides with simple fencing and gates that lead to small front and side yards which wrap around the first eight homes. In a classic downhill U-parti design, these first eight identical bungalows flank the central staircase on each side, each pair sitting at a higher elevation than the previous two. The two houses at the top of the staircase are larger units which face each other in closer proximity than the units below. These two upper homes do not have fencing or front yards. The property contains small patches of lawn and a variety of mature shrubs and trees.

These elevated hillside bungalows have no vehicular access; there are no garages, driveways or off street parking for tenants. This is a prime example of a transit oriented bungalow court that has never had a driveway or parking. When the bungalows were built, residents used the local streetcar line which ran every half hour along Sunset Boulevard. Today the area is serviced frequently by the MTA 2 and 4 bus lines, with a stop nearby at Sunset and Marion, half a block away.

The property is surrounded by commercial buildings as well as single and multi-family residences. As a major Los Angeles thoroughfare, Sunset Boulevard has become predominantly commercial and is constantly changing, yet these bungalows provide a glimpse into our rich, transit-oriented history; they represent one of a rare and shrinking number of properties in the immediate area that bear witness to a pre-automotive era from a hundred years ago. Still visible in the surrounding neighborhood are examples of turn-of-the-century Victorian and Craftsman homes, some of which have been converted to storefronts or sit just above a commercial building that was once a front yard. The entire neighborhood was built around the idea of the street car line as the main provider of public transport. The courtyard is in danger of being demolished and developed as a large apartment complex, with modern architecture proposed.

Exterior - Bungalows:

These ten single story bungalows were built in 1922 in a simple vernacular mode of the period, based on the Spanish Colonial Revival style. The bungalows are wood frame construction, clad in stucco; each has a crenelated parapet style roof bordering a flat asphalt surface. Each entry door is shaded by a permanent wood awning topped with Spanish tile. The small concrete porches have stucco or wrought iron sides. Above the porch awnings, each entry wall is embellished with a unique stucco-enclosed eave topped with Spanish tile, which extends from the roof and slopes down over the front facades of each unit. These simple homes have stucco exteriors and either double hung or 9-light casement style original wooden windows. Some windows have been reversibly altered with newer aluminum and louvered glass components, but the majority are original and all but one are in their original openings. The bungalows sit atop standard concrete foundations. The floor joists are supported by wood posts on masonry footings. A perimeter masonry foundation supports the cripple walls. Each bungalow takes advantage of the sloping grade by incorporating a basement that sits below each unit, accessible by an exterior door on the southern wall of each home - an unusual feature facilitated by the steep topography of the site.

Interiors - Bungalows:

The interiors of the units are typical of these simple Arts & Crafts influenced bungalows of the period, with lathe and plaster walls, basic wood moldings and casings around doors and windows, panel doors with mortise locks, wood built-ins and picture rail throughout. Some built-in kitchen cabinetry remains, but most of the kitchens have been modified to accommodate modern appliances. Claw foot bathtubs appear to be original in all bathrooms, along with some original wooden medicine cabinets. Original wood floors have been covered with newer surfaces such as linoleum or carpeting, but appear to be intact and solid.

Character-Defining Features:Site and Courtyard

- downhill U-parti site configuration and massing, including orientation and layout of one-story bungalows
- central concrete stairway
- individual green space

Residences - exteriors

- square, identical plan of each bungalow
- crenelated parapet roof with unique stucco and Spanish tile eaves on front facades of each bungalow
- exterior sand-finish stucco walls
- concrete porch entries
- original paired and single marginal nine-light, casement and double-hung windows throughout

Residences - Interiors

- lathe and plaster walls
- original wood built-ins, mouldings and casements typical of the Arts & Crafts movement
- original claw foot bathtubs and built-in medicine cabinets
- single panel interior doors
- original picture rail
- hardwood floors throughout (some covered with newer flooring)

Permits - Alterations:

The Stires Staircase Bungalow Court appears to be largely unaltered from their original construction. No alteration permits or historic photos were found for the property; current photos indicate that alterations are minor. There have been several permits issued since the original permit in 1922, mostly for foundation repairs, new roofing, and excavation for electrical conduit. Two permits were pulled in 2009 for a retaining wall at the upper east side of the property. Many of the casement and double hung windows have been replaced with metal frame louvre-style windows, all but one in their original openings. One window in the bathroom at 1255 ½ has been replaced with a smaller aluminum window.

Cultural, Economic and Social Significance:

In the late 19th and early 20th century, Los Angeles experienced fast-paced growth as early rancho estates gave way to the first subdivisions, and speculators began carving up land into tract maps to build the earliest housing developments. This growth spurt was fueled by banking and real estate investors who recognized the need for more housing and infrastructure to accommodate growing numbers of people moving to Los Angeles. While steam rail activated settlement and development across the country in the 19th century, electric rail would precede development in the first decade of the 20th century at its western terminus in Los Angeles.

Born in Oneonta, New York, railroad magnate Henry Huntington was the nephew of Collis P. Huntington, one of the "Big Four" railroad tycoons instrumental in creating the Central Pacific Railroad (later called Southern Pacific), one of the two railroads that built the transcontinental railway in 1869. Henry Huntington held several executive positions alongside his uncle with the Southern Pacific. In 1898, in friendly competition with his uncle's business, Huntington bought the narrow gauge city-oriented Los Angeles Railway (LARy), known as the 'Yellow Car' system. In 1901, Huntington formed the sprawling interurban, standard gauge Pacific Electric Railway (the PE), known as the 'Red Car' system, centered at 6th and Main Streets in downtown Los Angeles. Huntington succeeded in this competition by providing passenger friendly streetcars on 24/7 schedules, which the railroads could not match. This was facilitated by the boom in Southern California land development, where streetcars served passenger needs that the railroads had not considered. Connectivity to Downtown Los Angeles made transportation to the suburbs feasible.

After Collis Huntington's death, Henry Huntington inherited a portion of his uncle's empire and spent the first decade of the 20th century buying up land, building electric rail systems, then selling the subdivided, newly upgraded land to smaller investors. By 1911, Los Angeles had use of more commuter rail than any city in the world; over 1000 miles and over 2000 rail cars per day. This expansion reached the infill development stage by 1920 as most of Huntington's original tracts had been sold. It is during this second stage that investors set their sights on two empty parcels of land rising above the street car line which would become the Stires Staircase Bungalows. These bungalows exemplify the final stage of rail-led settlement and development at the absolute peak of rail access in Los Angeles history. The first rail line servicing the corridor known as Sunset Boulevard was built to take residents of Downtown Los Angeles to the Ostrich Farm Amusement Park in what is now Griffith Park. When the bungalows were built, residents used the Pacific Electric Echo Park Local streetcar line which ran every half hour from 9th and Hill along Sunset Boulevard to Cerro Gordo in Elysian Heights. This streetcar line was in use here from 1901 to at least 1947. At a time when the car was ascending as the primary form of transportation, the Stires Staircase Bungalows were designed without driveways, garages or any vehicle access. The staircase was the only connection the residents had to the street, making this site primarily dependent on the Pacific Electric streetcar or the oldest form of transport, your legs.

Is identified with historic personages or events in the main currents of national, state, or local history:

Vernon & Pearl Kemp Stires

The Stires Staircase Bungalows were built by banker and real estate investor Vernon S. Stires and his wife, Pearle Kemp Stires. Vernon Stires was born in Iowa and served in the Spanish-American War (circa 1899) before his short career as a dentist. He then started a couple of advertising firms in Pittsburgh and San Antonio, where he met and married Pearl Kemp in 1913. Together they moved to Los Angeles in late 1920, where Vern switched gears again and got into banking and real estate. The couple lived in Hollywood and had a summer home in Santa Monica. In 1922 they hired Henry and Daniel Fidroeff to serve as the architects and contractors for the new staircase bungalows on Sunset Boulevard.

Fidroeff Brothers

The Fidroeff brothers started out on very different paths. Born in Mitchell, South Dakota, Daniel fought for temperance with the Salvation Army and ran for Auditor on the 1908 Prohibition ticket, while his brother Henry was arrested and jailed multiple times for stealing watches and passing bad checks. Like many, the Fidroeffs may have come to LA for a fresh start, and it seems to have worked: Henry was never arrested again after moving to Los Angeles, and went on to become a successful business and property owner. The same year they were hired to build the Stires bungalows, they also built an English Revival home designed by architects Brelin & Sonat on Armada Drive in Pasadena. This home, the Norman M. Lyons Residence, is now part of the Prospect Historic District, which is on the National Register of Historic Places. Many of the Fidroeff projects were part of LA's first wave of infill development in the 1920s, when the population in Los Angeles was becoming denser and more urban. They built several streetcar-oriented multi-family developments in the early 1920s, including this bungalow court.

Lilly Bennett Baldwin Howard

After the Stires ownership ended in 1929, the bungalow court fell into the hands of Lilly Bennett Baldwin Howard, the 4th and final wife of the California Gold Rush tycoon and real estate speculator Elias Jackson "Lucky" Baldwin; one of the most flamboyant leaders of the Southern California banking industry in the first part of the 20th Century. Baldwin owned the Rancho La Cienega and founded the Santa Anita Racetrack. Baldwin Lake and his historic Queen Anne cottage, which served as the Santa Anita guest house, is located on Baldwin Avenue on the grounds of the LA Arboretum and Botanic Gardens in the City of Arcadia, which was founded by Baldwin himself as he served as it's first Mayor. Many locations such as Baldwin Park and Baldwin Hills are named after him, as these places - as well as cities such as Sierra Madre, Arcadia, and Monrovia - are part of the 76-square-mile rancho that he once owned. One of the greater Los Angeles Neighborhood Council Districts is named "The Lucky Baldwin District". In a 1933 book review, the New York Times wrote "Immoral, unmoral, amoral, Lucky Baldwin was all of them, in numerous, varied and picturesque ways". Baldwin was also known as a notorious ladies man, so it made nationwide news in 1884 when the 56-year-old Baldwin married Lilly, who was only sixteen at the time. "Baldwin's Belvedere", the Queen Anne cottage at the Arboretum, was designed by Lilly's architect father Albert A. Bennett, who also designed the State Capital in Sacramento, as a honeymoon gift from Lucky to his new bride. Lilly would separate from Baldwin after only a year, but they never divorced and she was by his side when he died in 1909. After his death, Lilly Baldwin flourished as her own financial manager and became a millionaire by investing in the banking business. It is interesting to note that both Lilly and the original owner of the bungalows, Vern Stires, served together on the Board of Directors of the West Side State Bank in 1927. Perhaps this is how she came to know about the Stires Staircase Bungalows, for when she became President of the Hollywood State Bank in 1930, her bank took ownership of the bungalows in that same year. She gained full title of the property in 1934, and the bungalows remained part of her estate until 1950. During her banking career, she served as President of the Hollywood State Bank and Broadway State Bank; Vice President of the First National Bank of Pasadena and owner of Continental Bank (later part of Bank of America). When she passed away in Los Angeles in 1938, her New York Times obituary called her a "financial genius," noting that she had "guided the destiny of half a dozen banks".

embodies the distinguishing characteristics of an architectural-type specimen:

The Bungalow Court Typology - Historical Background

Los Angeles had relatively slow growth until the late 19th century. Between 1880 and 1930 the population of Los Angeles doubled every ten years. From 1920 to 1930, more than two million people moved to California, the majority of which came to Southern California. By the 1920s, the intense demand for higher density housing resulted in innovative multi-family property designs that would assimilate into the low-density environment that predominantly characterized the city. Through a citywide height limit, early city planners encouraged "building activity to spread out over a wide area, benefiting a large number of property owners instead of a few." To satisfy the need for housing and capitalize on their investments, developers began to integrate low-scale, multi-family dwellings in the vast new subdivisions that radiated from the city center.

The bungalow court is one of the low-scale housing types that resulted from this movement. Introduced in 1909 by architect Sylvanus Marston, the novel idea of integrating common garden or courtyard space with multiple small homes on a single lot soon spread to become the predominant form of multi-family housing in Southern California. Because much of the growth in Los Angeles occurred near the hills surrounding downtown, many courtyard designs, including this one in Angeleno Heights, had to adjust themselves to topographical constraints. This breaking up of the courtyard into different levels resulted in strong articulation between the dwelling and the courtyard. Combining the privacy of single family homes with the affordability of a multi-unit apartment, the low profile of these dense developments drew a deep contrast to the verticality of dense projects in other large cities. Rather than facing the street, entrances face inward toward a common courtyard. While each family in a bungalow court had its own house and yard, upkeep and access of the semi-public areas were shared among the residents, contributing to a communal environment. The bungalow court brought the Craftsman bungalow to the middle class without compromising privacy or comfort, offering a particular balance of features that make such developments ideal for workers settling in Los Angeles. The essential popularity of the California bungalow style, which made it one of the most prolific housing styles in American architectural history, and which quickly spread throughout the country, was due to its economy of construction that incorporated the combined structural and decorative use of modest materials. The bungalow is of special interest today for being the home of the American Arts and Crafts style.

At this particular site, the unusual addition of basements furthers the idea of individual homes with storage space, as opposed to an apartment which gives a more transitory feel. At the height of bungalow court construction in or around Hollywood, the complexes were often built to accommodate the influx of writers, directors, camera operators, set designers and movie stars coming to the area. Nearby Edendale was the heart of the silent movie era, and with that came the crew to support this burgeoning new Southern California industry. The units were affordable to struggling Hollywood professionals in part because they could be built cheaply on small parcels of land.

Conclusion:

The Stires Staircase Bungalow Court successfully meets 3 of the specified Historic-Cultural Monument criteria:

- Reflects the broad cultural, economic, or social history of the nation, state, or community.

The Stires Staircase Bungalow Court reflects the broad cultural, economic and social history of the early Los Angeles environment. Constructed in 1922 and located in the Angeleno Heights area, the Stires Staircase Bungalow Court is a rare surviving example of housing typography introduced during the early stages of Los Angeles rail transportation. The site exemplifies transit-oriented development of rail-led settlement at the absolute peak of rail access in Los Angeles History. While the automobile was rapidly gaining in popularity, this courtyard was built without any vehicular access, designed to conform to the steep hillside with a staircase to the street, where tenants could connect to the Pacific Electric Echo Park Local streetcar line. By design and necessitated by its geography, it was built to utilize the local street car line and capitalize on the idea of public rail as the new normal for metropolitan transit.

- Is identified with historic personages or with important events in the main currents of national, state, or local history.

This bungalow court was conceived by pioneer investors Vernon and Pearl Stires and built by the noteworthy Fideroff Brothers during the infill development stage, as they recognized the need for more housing to accommodate the growing population of Los Angeles. The property was acquired in a banking deal by Lilly Baldwin, the last wife of the famous and flamboyant "Lucky" Baldwin. Lilly became a firebrand in her own right after Lucky's death, as she became one of the first female bank executives to make her fortune in the banking industry. She came to own the courtyard in 1930 as part of her banking empire, in the days when most women were relegated to making dinner and washing clothes. Lilly and her estate owned the property for 20 years, twelve years after her New York Times obituary in 1938 declared her a “financial genius”, noting her extensive banking career.

- Embodies the distinguishing characteristics of an architectural-type specimen, inherently valuable for study of a period, style, or method of construction.

The site provides an important example of a surviving and significant Bungalow Court typology built in the Mission Revival style, inherently valuable for study of this period and style. Featuring two rows of one-story detached homes arranged on either side of an ascending concrete staircase, the site exhibits classic downhill U-parti character defining features and was designed for a communal, park-like setting. It goes beyond the typical courtyard with individual basement storage spaces and roofing embellishments.

Conclusion:

The Stires Staircase Bungalow Court embodies the spirit of innovative Southern California development that resulted in the Bungalow Court design. Reflecting the early spirit of rail-related settlement in Los Angeles, and with ties to the entrepreneurial determination of Lilly Baldwin, this unique property merits preservation for future generations to appreciate.

"Elias Jackson "Lucky" Baldwin and his young bride"

- circa 1884-1885 -

*A MILLIONAIRE'S THIRD MARRIAGE.
From the San Francisco Chronicle, May 21.*

A very notable society event occurred yesterday afternoon. E. J. Baldwin was joined in wedlock to Miss Lilly C. Bennett, daughter of A. A. Bennett, of the firm of Curtis & Bennett, architects, the builder of the State Capitol and many of the principal buildings in the State. The engagement had been kept very quiet. No cards had been issued, and only intimate friends were present. The home of the bride, where the ceremony was performed, was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Miss Mary Morton was brides-maid, and Reuben H. Lloyd was Mr. Baldwin's best man. The Rev. R. C. Foute, of Grace Church, officiated. The bride was attired in a neat traveling suit, and went through the ceremony without emotion. After congratulations a lunch was partaken of. The bride is a beautiful blonde of about 20 years of age, and has moved in the highest circles of society. The bridal couple, accompanied by Mrs. Bennett, left for the East yesterday afternoon on a tour of some months. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin will give a series of receptions at Mr. Baldwin's residence, the old Curtis mansion, 1,217 California-street. How the acquaintance of the pair was made is thus told: A few months ago the Supervisors of Los Angeles concluded that they wanted a new Court-house, and advertised for plans. As the commissions would be about $10,000 architects came from all quarters of the State to compete for the prize. Among others, Albert A. Bennett, of this city, accompanied by his daughter, Lilly C., appeared before the board. E. J. Baldwin, having large possessions in Los Angeles, also attended to watch the proceedings. The youth, beauty, and intelligence of Miss Bennett fascinated the susceptible millionaire. The struggle over the Court-house ended in the success of a rival architect, but Baldwin proposed, Miss Bennett accepted, and yesterday they were married. The groom's first wife is still living in this city with her married daughter, Mrs. Ford, at the old Baldwin House, No. 410 Geary-street. A legal separation was had some years ago, and a large portion of the community property, valued at over $1,000,000, was settled on the lady. Mr. Baldwin's second wife died about 12 months since. She was Miss Jennie Dexter, formerly of Virginia City, and one of several handsome sisters, who were very well known in this city.

MRS. LILY HOWARD, COAST FINANCIER

Widow of Lucky Baldwin, Gold
Mine Owner and Sportsman,
Dies in Los Angeles

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 9.—Mrs. Lily Baldwin Howard, widow of E. J. (Lucky) Baldwin, died today of a heart attack, following an operation last Saturday for appendicitis. The woman whose financial genius guided the destiny of half a dozen banks collapsed Saturday afternoon, and an operation was performed in a vain attempt to have her life.

Only last week Mrs. Howard appeared as a defendant in a suit over asserted non-support brought by her niece, Mrs. Vivian A. Howard. Ironically, a jury verdict favoring a judgment of $120,800 was found against Mrs. Howard this afternoon, hours after she had died.

As the fourth wife of Lucky Baldwin, multimillionaire gold mine owner and sportsman of the Gay Nineties, she reigned as one of the social leaders of San Francisco.

She was married to Mr. Baldwin in 1887 when only 16 years of age. At the time he was looked upon as the most colorful of American financiers.

After his death in 1910 his widow interested herself in finance and managed her own business affairs. She became president of the Hollywood State Bank and the Broadway State Bank as well as vice president of the First National Bank of Pasadena, Calif.

Many years ago she bought the old Continental Bank, which later became a part of the Bank of America.

In 1919 she was married to William Duff Howard, a distant relative who was somewhat older than she.
